Excerpt from Administration of Justice Programs: Hearing Before the Committee on Foreign Affairs, House of Representatives, One Hundred Third Congress, First Session, September 14, 1993 The committee met, pursuant to call, at 10 a.m., in room 2172, Rayburn House Office Building, Hon. Lee H. Hamilton (chairman of the committee) presiding. Chairman Hamilton. The meeting of the committee will come to order. I want to thank our witnesses for appearing this morning. I regret that the Deputy Attorney General is not able to join us. I understand he has an illness in his family and of course we understand. I also know that he has a particular interest in the program that we have and we are very pleased that the Deputy Assistant General, Mark Richard, could appear in Mr. Heymann s absence. The administration of justice and other judicial and legal reform programs generally have not received much attention. I want this hearing and the legislation which may develop to focus on what these programs are about, how they are coordinated within the executive branch and how we can improve their effectiveness as they are implemented in more and more countries. The administration, of course, has identified the promotion of democracy as one of the pillars on which future aid decisions will be based. Legal reform programs are a significant component of democracy initiatives. As you know, I am interested in several basic questions about legal reform programs within the executive branch: Who is in charge, given our very limited foreign aid budget? How does the executive branch determine which countries will receive assistance? What are the standards for eligibility? What are the objectives for the programs? How do we measure results? How...
