Excerpt: . . . it needs coaling men, and I sincerely hope that the Engineering Society to-night will not disband without having done something. We have talked a good deal. I went the other night to the meeting of the University Club. We talked for two hours and a half, and what did we do Nothing--absolutely nothing. Now, I hope the Society will not disband to-night without doing something, without giving some good suggestion that will enable the navy officers to gather in more recruits for the firemen and for the coal heavers and for the machinists and for the gunners. Now, we, the engineers, come in contact more or less with the class of people who can afford to enlist. So it is up to us, each man, each one of us, to guarantee that we will do our utmost to help the navy in this emergency. What the army is going to do in this ease is somewhat problematical, but there is absolutely nothing to think of that does not show that the navy is right now on the firing line. They are patrolling the seas from New Foundland to the Gulf, and at any moment we are liable to hear that an engagement has taken place and that some vessel has been lost. . the history of the American navy is a thing we can all. qt;We met the Englishman twice and defeated of the liavyisone of great glory for this American continent, so that any...
