Boccock, of Virginia: Delivered in the House of Representatives, February 20 and 21, 1861 I am not in the habit of expressing myself rashly, or in exaggerated terms; and I would not now speak in such language of this bill if I did not believe that I can show to every unbiased mind that what I say is just. We have now upon the statute-book, Mr. Speaker, the acts of 1795 and of 1807. Under these laws the President has ample authority to call out the regular military power of the country, in case of invasion or danger of invasion from any foreign nation or Indian tribe; also, in case of insurrection in any State against the Government thereof - in which case he shall act only upon the call of the Legislature of such State, if in session: or if not in session, then upon the call of the Governor. He has also the same power whenever the laws of the United States shall be opposed, or the execution thereof obstructed in any State, by combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, or by the powers vested in the marshals, c. Now, sir, this power has heretofore been considered ample for every case which might arise under our Constitution. But this bill does more. It authorizes the President of the United States to employ the entire military power of the country in the case of insurrections against the authority of the United States. Insurrections against the authority of the United States! What are they? What authority has the United States beyond the...
