Excerpt from L ile Percee; The Finial of the St. Lawrence or Gaspe Flaneries: Being a Blend of Reveries and Realities; Of History and Science; Of Description and Narrative; As Also a Signpost to the Traveler
Blen learned little of human anatomy studying it only from the outside or from a few accidental gashes on the body. We may search the whole length and breadth of our great mountain system of eastern North America - the Appalachians - and find no more than here and there a gash or surface scratch to tell the secret of its making. But on the coasts of Perce the scalpel of the sea has gone deep and here stand exposed, riotously incarnadined, the very penetralia of the mountain system. Over such intimate structures the haruspex read the future; here he reads the past. And so, amid other charms of beauty and humanity, Perce and her coast hold out this brilliant record of a long past. And there are added features in her geology which implant added beauty to her lines and are not elsewhere to be seen....
