The revelations made by the microscope in the study of the cause of disease gave a new impulse in the study of pathology, and made a new and different history as well as a radical change in the treatment of disease of men and animals, in many of the affections of which they suffer. Medical schools at once began to teach their students how to use the microscope and what to search for in the study of tuberculosis, typhoid and malarial fevers and in the study of malignant growths. The examination of the...
