Excerpt: . . . their fellow-subjects, but has lately rather changed its tone. Henry Bulwer, who is just returned from the United States, told me he thought it a very serious affair that the American Government was in fact powerless to prevent such expeditions, and would probably not only not attempt to do so, but if they thought there had been any chance of Lopez succeeding, that they would then very probably step in and protect him. I suspect, however, that the very little sympathy shown to these buccaneers by the Cuban population, and the very summary manner in which Lopez and his followers were dealt with by the Spanish authorities, will put a stop to these expeditions, at all events for some time to come. Hatchford, Saturday, October 18. --I came here on the 15th from Panshanger. When at the latter place, Walewski told me that he and Palmerston got on remarkably well on everything whereon Palmerston had not une idee fixe, when it was useless to try and make any impression upon him. The most difficult question they had to deal with together was that of the refugees, that every day gave fresh proof of the activity of their conciliabules, which Palmerston did not deny, but which he always said he had no means of preventing. Walewski told me that he and his colleagues were always urging our Government to pass an Alien Bill, but to this Palmerston invariably turned a deaf ear. The two days...
