

Someday House: The Life and Passions of Aggie O Hara

By Janice Brown

Createspace, United States, 2013. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 202 x 126 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .In this creative biography, told as a series of short stories, Aggie O Hara passionately shares her journey that begins in the Dirty Thirties. Her father travels far from home in search of work, while her distraught and pregnant mother blames firstborn Aggie for all her woes and the three children that followed. But both her Scottish granny-a mirror image of Aggie with the same blond hair and blue eyes-and her father love her and help her develop the will to survive and thrive. Aggie falls madly in love-at 16-with a dark, handsome stranger that she marries at 21, while working as a Rosie the Riveter in a World War II aircraft factory, making close to a man s wages. Both sets of parents find the match unsuitable, but grudgingly accept it, and the couple move into a makeshift home of their own. When the war ends and the thousands of returning veterans make the job market difficult, Aggie grabs any job available, while juggling two children and a husband tied to pool halls and gang violence. A...
