Excerpt: . . . 11 This just gives you in perspective of where we are. And this is a real apples to apples comparison of National Defense spending as a percentage of GDP. We contributed more as a percentage of our economy under the Carter Administration than we are today, and we are facing a war that is global in reach. A war that is going to cost us a lot and a lot of time. And so I think it is important to put these things in perspective. I think it is important to consider the fact that this is our highest priority for our nation, for our federal government, but at the same time given all the dollars involved and all the sacrifices that we see from our men and women that we represent, we need to have...
