Excerpt from Mortuary: Joseph Dennie, January 7, 1812 Hie ordinary pursuits of life to offer his undivided devotion on the altar of literature. The love of letters was, indeed, his dar ling passion - the light which had charmed his youth, which il laminated his manhood, which still threw its mellow and wa vering beam on the sickness and sorrow, even of his dying hour. In the indulgence of this enthusiasm he had been a most labormus student - he had read every thing on every sub ject - se that if the rigidly exact sciences be excepted, the1e was scarcely a topic of human knowledge with which he was not.
