The associates of the Society include a large majority of the whole School, whose attendance at meetings is purely voluntary. In the Summer Term four or five half-holidays are set aside for expeditions. These are conducted by the various sections into which the whole is subdivided--botanical, zoological, geological, entomological, photographic, architectural--whose labours are peripatetic, while the meteorological section is stationary and records the behaviour of barometer, thermometer, and rain-gauge in Rugby. Each section has a member of the School as its Secretary, and to each a Master belongs as well. The expeditions are mainly by bicycle, but sometimes go further afield; and it has been found by experience that the best flowers, birds, flints, moths, churches, and landscapes are nearly always in the neighbourhood of some inn where tea may be obtained when Research has induced weariness....
