Not illustrated. 1873 Excerpt: .and grapho--I write, it seems to me a word well fitted for its purpose, said the Elzevir. The word, at any rate, must remain in office now; it is far too firmly fixed to be dislodged, replied the New Book. The truth is, we delineate objects by the rays of the sun; but not by the light or the heat, strictly speaking, possessed by those rays; but by certain chemical properties belonging to them. We will not enter into that matter, however; it is sufficient for our purpose to know that the rays of the sun are able to effect chemical changes upon certain substances, especially upon the salts of silver--that is, the compounds formed by the union of silver with an acid. I have long been aware, said the Mystery, that light hath a darkening influence upon horn silver. That fact was duly noted and commented upon, to some degree, by the wise men of my day. Very probably the horn silver of which you speak was a mixture of silver and chlorine, called by us fused chloride of silver. But though your learned alchemists of the sixteenth century noted the fact (and that was something worth the doing), they do not seem to have carried out their observations to any practical result. The great Prussian chemist Scheele seems to have been the first to take up the subject, about the year 1777, in a proper, that is, a scientific way. In 1802, our great...
