

The Search for Tomorrows Treasures

---

By Carol Johnson

Carol Johnson Self Published. Paperback. Condition: New. 334 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.8in. Carol Johnson's The Search for Tomorrows Treasures invites you aboard the starship Aries to witness the thrilling journey of three beautiful surveyors and their quirky computer navigators. This space opera is akin to the writings of Anne McCaffrey. Captain Beth Griffin enjoys cataloging the great curiosities of space. The binary star system creates music to rival Earth's operas and the nebula cluster paints shifting masterpieces with elemental dust. Beth is initially annoyed when Axel, her mobile quantum navigator interrupts her with news of a rogue planet displaying strange stone formations. That is, until she realizes that the stone formations are perfect copies of the Egyptian pyramids and the planet doesn't belong in the dying dwarf system. She's stumbled upon a massive alien museum recording the great achievements of sentient races and its historian, Goren is strangely mesmerizing. He reveals that her value is not limited to protecting her planetary teams already working on Citron and Sentara. Beth must decide whether to follow this mysterious alien or continue her mission as is. Unfortunately Christine and Rose are already in great danger. Commander Christine Solski lands on Citron...
