Excerpt: .panel--a characteristic and good specimen. RAPHAEL, (Rafaele Sanzio, or Santi,) born at Trbino in 1483. It is as difficult to characterize this wonderfully endowed painter as it is to characterize Shakspeare; he takes the same rank in Art that Shakspeare takes in literature. Standing quite alone in the versatility, as well as the greatness of his powers--unequalled in poetical dignity, grace and expression, as in fertility of invention--one is as tired of tacking epithets to his name as to that of Shakspeare, and the divine, and the immortal, are words which rather express our own adoration than his desert;--add the personal qualities of the man --his bright, gentle, generous spirit--his modesty, his beauty of person, his young life crowned with glory, and his early death in the blaze of his fame, which still shines on without dimness or eclipse, and shall do so while the universe endures. Extract from Fuseli's Lectures. If, separately taken, the line of Raphael has been excelled in correctness elegance and energy; his colour far surpassed in tone, and truth and harmony his masses in roundness, and his chiaro-oscuro in effect, --considered as instruments of pathos, they have never been equalled; and in composition, invention, expression, and the power of telling a story, he has never been approached. No. 12.--RAPHAEL S AMASIA, commonly called LA FOR NARINA--on panel-- the history of this person, to whom Raphael was attached even to his death, is obscure, nor...
