It is great and fantastic. Better than never, though I am quite late in starting to read this one. It has been written in an extremely simple way and is particularly only right after I finished reading this ebook where it actually changed me, affected the way I really believe.

Excerpt: . . . genius, of mercantile enterprise, popular equality and civil power. It is in the schoolhouse that peoples have passed from childhood to manhood, from subordination to independence, from pupilage to mastership. At these fountains we drink the inspiration to great deeds and lofty character, and engender thoughts that ripen into divine philosophies and imperishable literatures. From these science goes forth to marshal her countless utilities, and art to fill her canvas with enduring beauty, and build her temples that teach through the ages. Our own Franklin has said, If a man empties his purse into his head, no one can take it from him. Not even a bold man would dare impeach the practical wisdom of the philosopher on a question so obvious, but his axiom is only half the truth. The investment of capital in knowledge is not simply the safest, but it is the most profitable disposition we can make of our fortunes. He who so invests may, after a time, empty his head into his purse, if it possessed any raw material originally. A stupid clod-hopper sows his grain and reaps fifteen bushels to the acre; his neighbor puts his brains into his work and reaps fifty bushels to the acre. A similar disproportion of income runs into every branch of human industry. Intelligent labor is not limited to single lines of pursuit, and the quality of its work is as superior as its quantity, and hence the demand for it, and the...
