Excerpt from The Westinghouse Companies Exhibits at the International Railway Congress, Washington, 1905 Westinghouse Company, Limited, which supplies Canada from its works at Hamilton, Ontario; by the Societe Anonyme Westinghouse, which supplies France, Belgium, Switzerland, Spain, Portugal, Holland and Italy, and their colonies and protectorates, from its works at Freinville, France; and by the Societe Anonyme Westinghouse, which supplies the Russian Empire in Europe and Asia from its works at St. Petersburg. The demonstration of the Westinghouse high - speed brake, which has been adopted in the fast passenger service of America more quickly than in that of other countries, was naturally of unusual interest to delegates from abroad. The advent of the Westinghouse air brake in 1869 heralded a new era in transportation in which the question of speed was to become one of locomotive efficiency and economy rather than of control, and it was inevitable that its introduction should have encouraged the establishment of new standards of locomotive and coach construction for higher speeds and greater power, and for the better protection and increased comfort of the passenger. Improvements in Westinghouse...
