Excerpt from Shall We Build?: A Sermon, Delivered March 1st, 1840, in View of Building a New Church Edifice Brethren! With such dependence, and in such a spirit, we can accomplish any practicable object. If we have the glory of God in View, as I trust we have, and are not influenced by vain and foolish notions of pride and ostentation, as I am persuaded we are not, we can, under God, accomplish the building a house to the honor of his name. The first question is - Do we need a new church edifice, or cannot the present house be made to answer all necessary purposes? The answer will be made by a statement of facts. This house is of wood, and, having been built for some years, requires considerable repairs. With all the repairs that could be put on it, it could not, at most, without additional repairs, nor, indeed, with them, last but a very few years. It is, then, a question of calculation ought we to repair this house, and thus lay out a considerable sum,...
