Possesses also its own railway con meeting with the canal of the Delaware and Hudson Co., at a point about nine miles this side of the further terminus of that canal, and extending about 47 miles through the beautiful valley of the Wyoming, nearly down to Wilkesbarre, where its lands and its mines are, and from which it brings annually about tons of coal to this market. The relations between these two companies arise in this manner The Delaware and Hudson Canal Co., having this canal, found that it had a capacity to pass boats upon it altogether exceeding its means of mining and transporting over its own road. The company, there fore, thought it would be highly expedient and profitable to bring this surplus capacity into use. The motives for that project are...
