There will possibly come a day I woefully imagine in the near future when you might find yourself in a darkened world alongside a road. The road might not end but you can go no further. You will be far from home and find yourself without gas, food, banks, Law Enforcement or hospital care because a manmade or natural disaster such as a EMP (Electromagnetic pulse) has shut the power grid off nationwide for a indeterminate length of time. You wonder what to do next. Let s hope this scenario never comes about or ever happens, but if it does you will find that at a light speed pace you have finally reached the proverbial end of the road in the realist sense ever. Doom awaits the ill informed or ignorant. Society will be collapsing, murder and mayhem rule in the streets and the real survival has just now started at your little formerly peaceful campsite day one. Do you have in that prepared mind of yours all the relevant skills, tools on hand, manuals or references to survive before the food runs out? How about after it runs out, what then? Can you protect your goods today with any degree of certainly from other survivors who are just as hungry and desperate as you are? Do you have the tools that you need to keep you warm and fed through the winter? Do you think that you have the proper survival mindset and prepper bushcraft skills necessary to make it anywhere in the U.S. no matter where your own personal road has led you to so far? Could you, or should I say would you, if you had to walk...
