Excerpt from Juvenile Instructor, Vol. 38: July 1, 1903 The first department was devoted to manual training. We went first into the weaving rooms, where the looms for the weaving of wool and fax were humming. A number of people were at work, some of them expert workmen; for they come Ofttimes from the manufacturing districts Of. The Old World: They had on sale in the room many articles of their own handiwork. Behind the. Weaving room is a kitchen; here children and grown people come for lessons in cooking. These lessons consist of two parts; the first is devoted to a lecture on the properties of food, their relative value in building up the tissues of the body; the best methods of preparing food; and the practical work, wherein they make and cook the foods concerning which they have received instruction. Connected with the home is a dining room, where meals are served at a nominal figure, the proceeds going. To the support of the home.
