Mittal Publications, New Delhi, 1995. N.A. Condition: New. Viii+435pp Dissent may be considered essential for healthy growth of democratic institutions. Dissent leading to demand regional autonomy, statehood and similar other concessions within the constitutional framework of the country may be genuine hence tolerable; but demand for separation and secession from the federal union is dangerous to national sovereignty and integrity. Currently the Indian Union is facing several such crises, of which Jharkhand, Uttarakhand, Bodoland, and Gorkhaland issues, reflect some genuine grievances of the people concerned while Kashmir, Khalistan (Punjab), Naga, Mizo and to some extent Assam issues are destructive hence condemnable. Often the question arises when there were no drawbacks in our fundamental concept of federal republican system then what is reason of the present crisis, India is passing through. Some say it is the crisis of leadership and of national character. Really these crises emerged due to gradually ignoring the significance of democratic institution. So this may be termed as crisis of institution? The present volume is a vivid description of many such issues. This is certainly a timely publication on a crucial and important topic.
