Createspace Independent Publishing Platform, 2018. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .I strolled on, at the same lazy pace. With the same rambling thoughts buzzing around in my mind. After a few minutes, I came out of my thoughts as I heard voices and I looked up. The voices had come from three young men, in their late teens or early twenties, who were coming out from under the Kesswell Bridge and walking towards me on the footpath further along. It was the lad in the middle, which really caught my eye as; he had on a hood, what they call nowadays, a hoodie, grey in colour pulled up over his head although it was a hot sunny afternoon. His fake combat trousers, hanging down from his waist as they were a couple of sizes too large and he had white trainers on his feet. The one nearest me was about two feet away when he shouted out, Let s have your money, old man, and he moved, rather menacing towards me Why I did it, I do not know. I was not even thinking about it. In fact, it did not even register until it was all over that I did it. My right arm suddenly shot out palm facing downwards with the little finger facing the lad, and it struck him under the nose with a lot of force. There was a loud noise of a bone cracking and blood oozed from his nose as he dropped to the ground with a funny noise coming from his mouth as if he was trying to breathe. I knew from my army experience, a long time ago, that he would not get up to cause me any trouble so my attention went to...
