Until the month before last nothing had been heard of Stefannson and his companions, and it seemed they must have perished. Louis Lane, captain of the power schooner Polar Bear, brought back to civilization the news that the explorer and his party are alive and have resumed their efforts to find new Arctic lands. The Polar Bear outfitted in Seattle, March, 1915, for a trading expedition and to hunt walrus and polar bear in the Arctic. Besides taking on the regulation supply of ammunition, knives and trinkets to exchange with the Eskimos for whalebone and ivory, Lane stocked up with Standard products, for he planned to search the Arctic seas for Stefannson. This included about 10, 000 gallons of..
