As they will not eat dead fish, large tanks of water would have been a necessity, with a process of aerating it and food for the fish until they were eaten. The 22 pachydermata would have required an average of 200 pounds of vegetable food per day. Hay would be most readily obtained although if no vegetables or grain was fed, a greater quantity would be used. At this rate they would eat over 840 tons of hay in 382 days. 3,500 clean beasts such as oxen, deer, antelope, sheep, goats, buffalo, reindeer--and the horse, zebra, camels, and numerous other animals not included in the clean list--would require not less than an...
