Excerpt from A Lighter Packing Case: The Story of a New England Industry That Is Helping to Solve a Vital Problem Located in the Northern, wooded section of New England is an industry about which little has been known, although it is solving one of the most vital problems that confronts manufacturers today. It is small wonder, perhaps, that the question of a container for shipping goods should have seemed of less importance in the early days, but modern commerce and methods of transportation have made this phase of placing goods on the market as much a matter of science as any particular process of manufacture.
