Excerpt from The Alumni Review, Vol. 12: The University of North Carolina; December, 1923 The University is not offering alibis for games lost. In fact the season panned out just about as was predicted. No one expected Carolina to do much with Yale and there was little surprise when the Maryland and V. M. I. Games were shifted to the defeat side of the ledger. There are those who think that Carolina should have beaten Virginia and who point to comparative scores as evidence. It should be remember ed, however, Carolina used the same system as last year and therefore got off to a good start, while Virginia had a new coach and a new system and was naturally slower in rounding into form.
