StAnley V NCE more I am permitted to write to my dearest friend. . O Fanny! what terrors, to what shocking scenes, have I been witness since last you heard from me: never, never shall I forget the horrid sight; ah! let me, if possible, drive the recollection from my memory, even now D J I tremble at the very idea. I write this at Beverly Castle. My dear, my kind aunt, with Lord and Lady Sandford arrived here last night; the latter I find was so good as to inform my Fanny of my being here I would have done it myself, my dear friend, had I been able, but I am not well; my spirits have received a shock they will not easily recover. Ah, my dear Fanny! I shall never again be the happy cheerful creature you have known me. Be not too much alarmed my health is not injured, time may do much, --but you are no doubt impatient to hear the particulars of my adventure, Alas! how have we diverted ourselves, by giving that appellation to trifles, little dreaming a day would come, when I should have but too much reason to adopt the phrase. Excuse me, my dear girl, if I make the story as short as I possibly can; the subject is too mortifying to dwell upon unnecessarily--You are already informed of the most material...
