Excerpt from Verrazano the Navigator: Or Notes on Giovanni Da Verrazano and on a Planisphere of 1529 Illustrating His American Voyage in 1524; With a Reduced Copy of the Map; A Paper Read Before the American Geographical Society of New York November 28th 1871 The publication in 1825, edited by Navarrete, of Spanish documents relating to the discovery and exploration of America, followed by the interesting life of Columbus by Washington Irving, and the Examen Critique by Von Humboldt, opened a field for studies in American comparative geography that is becoming fruitful of results. The last named work is a guide which all must consult. With a master hand the author combines and collates all attainable materials, and draws light from sources which he first brings to bear on his exhaustive investigations. The interest thus newly awakened by the appearance of these works, lent fresh activity to such researches, bringing out numerous hitherto neglected or unknown documents. Among these we may name the Ooleccz on de Documentos Ineditos in forty - one volumes, of which a portion relate to the spanish-american possessions,...
