Excerpt from Factors Influencing the Carrying Qualities of American Export Corn The moisture content of corn, and of other grains as well, is the primary factor determining their capacity to carry safely in ocean transit without deterioration. Corn in which the moisture content is sufficiently low will carry safely under ordinary conditions of ocean transit for any reasonable length of time during any season of the year, no matter where it is stowed in the vessel, while corn containing a high moisture content is constantly in danger of heating at any time owing to a variety of contributing causes. Thoroughly air-dried corn contains from about 12 to 13 per cent of moisture. Such corn may be shipped for export at any time under ordinary conditions with little or no danger from heating in transit, and this is practically true also of corn containing up to 14 per cent moisture provided fermentation has not started. The fact that certain lots of corn contain higher percentages of moisture does not necessarily mean that they will not stand ocean shipment safely. The corn may be perfectly sound, the voyage may be short, the air temperature at the time of loading and during the voyage may be low, no disturbing influence such as heat radiating from the ship's boilers and engine rooms and shaft tunnels may be encountered, and the corn kept practically in cold storage. Under such most favorable conditions, corn with a relatively high moisture content may sometimes be safely carried. Cargoes of such corn are often landed upon the quays in Europe in a perfectly cool condition, which corn, upon being exposed to warm atmospheric conditions often becomes hot and unfit for...
