Reviews

It is one of my personal favorite books. It is written in easy terms and never hard to understand. It has been designed in an exceedingly easy way and it is only after I finished reading this publication by which in fact changed me, change the way I think.

Excerpt: . . . Yet mind will question, though it be but fond, For human thought that looks within, finds scenes So strange, yet unresolved, it stands at gaze, Knowing not itself; and He who has so Moulded man lies close pressed among its deepest Mysteries. Invisible Power, what art thou, That thus with thy shadow veilst all, making In thine own obscurity all marvel Greater Down, down, thou questioner. Yet we Are Gods, with a Gods powers, then why not Give a Gods knowledge, that we may turn the Edge of all misgiving, and fixed be Firm and free Unpremeditated our Thoughts oft fly across the brain, and oft, as Hounds hunt a forest, are by obstacles Turned, till far at fault, they lose the scent of Every purpose, for our minds do not aye Echo their desires, but like stones fall back From the vault of their ambition and seek Again the forms whence they sprung. Yet there is Something in us, something we would not mortal Think, and rashly dare immortal make it; That like the volcanos suppressed fire Shall burst its earth-clad ribs, and to heaven Blaze, flattering us with a Gods eternal Life. Here, among these ruins, that like a Decaying minds shattered thoughts disordered Lie--here, where time and decay lift huge sighs, As if oppressed by the wreck they have made, I mark the hand of invisible power; In thoughts chiselled into forms and structures, In minds creative art, rearing wondrous Temples,...
