Compiled from Quecket Club Journal. WITH FRONTISPIECE. One of the strangest facts in plant life that has been worked out by the botanists daring the past 100 years is the following. There are plants called fungi which not only live parasitic upon other plants but require two or more species as hosts. This fact was not settled scientifically until 1816 when a Danish schoolmaster rubbed the underside of a barberry leaf infected with aecidia onto some plants in a field of rye. The rye plants were then marked. In a few da. ys, the fungus had spread itself widely over the plants in question while all the others were...
