When mental health therapist Helena L. Rouhe loses both of her parents within the span of eighteen days, she comes face-to-face with an experience that will change her forever. There s no instruction manual on how to grieve the death of a loved one-it s a process filled with peaks and valleys, and while Rouhe has counseled hundreds of people navigating the waters of sorrow, she soon realizes she has to put her teacher s hat aside and learn her way through this heartbreaking situation. While managing her parents estate and sifting through their stuff, Rouhe begins to examine and catalogue her own stuff -both physical and emotional. This soul-searching period helps her identify the enormous influence her parents have had on the choices she s made and who she s become. Front Row Seats to Crazy is the story of Rouhe s loss, how she survives her grief, and the indelible impact her parents had on her-and on all those with whom they shared their lives.
