The main characters are middle class citizens, Ellie and Matt Jameson and affluent psychologists, Ann and Dr. Smith. This melodrama explodes after Ellie Jamesons husband is kidnapped. When Matt Jameson is found safe, after being stuffed into the trunk of a car for nineteen hours, the couple mistakenly believes that all their troubles have ended. Unfortunately, the residual affects of the kidnapping hideously creep up on Matt and Ellie forcing them to seek professional help. Things go terribly awry as Ellies graduate-student therapist, Ann, inadvertently triggers memories of abuse and loss from Ellies past. Vulnerable, open and fragile, like a fresh bloody wound, Ellie is devastated when Ann terminates therapy to do an out of state internship. Along that treacherous roller coaster ride, you will meet Ellies new therapist, Dr. Smith. You will witness Dr. Smiths efforts to save Ellie from her mode of crash and burn. In her attempts to counsel Ellie and help her deal with Anns rejection, Dr. Smith frequently skirts the code of professional ethics and in doing so inadvertently distresses Ellie further.
