Not illustrated. 1922 Excerpt: .I am inclined to believe that there are still many roads using the old methods. However, to get satisfactory results machinery must be properly designed, intelligently used and kept in good repair, otherwise much trouble and disappointment will result and there will be a tendency to condemn the machines and get back to old methods. To avoid such unsatisfactory results the modern street railway maintenance engineer, or his assistant, should have as one of his strongest mental assets a thorough and practical knowledge of machinery and mechanics. Mr. Youxt: Von have heard these very interesting papers; now. let us have some discussion. Mr. Homer 15. Murdoch (San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Railways): I would like to ask Mr. Chamberlain the reason they had for discontinuing the use of welded joints. Mr. Chamberlain: We used them lor about five years. They gave good results at first, but pretty soon we began to find broken rails and the welds breaking off. The Chief Electrician made tests and found that the electrical conductivity was causing deterioration. He then required outside bonds, which was expensive, and we finally discontinued the use of the welded joints in 1017. Mr. Murdoch: In connection with your compressors, what size pile do you use and how many feet of air? Mr. Chamberlain: Ninety-six cubic feet. Each compressor requires 16 cubic feet. Three-quarter-inch hose supplies two tampers. We use two lengths of three-quarter-inch hose and two short lengths of half-inch hose.Main outlet from the compressor is one...
