Not illustrated. 1870 Excerpt: .the Old Testament comment, to the New Testament truth. The word, however, is one. Take Christ, then, as your Teacher; as your confidential Friend; and you will then learn the secret of true happiness. XVIII. Proverbs xiv. 32. IF we were required in a word or two, to characterise this verse, it would be by two familiar, but expressive words: darkness -- light. In this declaration, there are all the essential elements of each involved, in the respective expressions, and experiences of the text, regarding the righteous and the wicked. Of the latter, it is said he is driven away in his wickedness, but of the former, he hath hope in his death. These are not fancy sketches, they are the actual issues of life under different aspects: divine revelation exhibits these issues, to warn the unruly, and to comfort the obedient. In the Scriptures we have many illustrations confirmatory of these statements; and to some of these, we shall refer in the course of our examination of this passage. To do this, --To explain what the statements in the text mean, --and, to draw out the lessons, will be our aim, by God s help. The meaning of the statements in our text. 1. Terms used are descriptive of individuals. The wicked, The righteous. The wicked This is a phrase much misunderstood. Very few unconverted persons would acknowledge themselves to be such; but every such individual comes under this denomina Isa. lvii. 20,21. He lives...
