N trembler disappeared, Gideon s heart yearning over him. The calm expostulating voice of David was heard for some time, and the low thick sob of Davie, --then rose the voice of one in earnest prayer, and there was a moment s pause followed by Davie s shrill scream of Oh! father, father!--reason wi me, and shew me my error, a wee whilie langer; but the inexorable scourge descended rapidly, perhaps severely; for David Fennick was no joker in any business to which he seriously thought that duty called...
