Excerpt from Peterkin And meanwhile how fared the world with the object of their remarks? As the ship passed into the lower bay strange emotions filled the hearts of the jumble of passengers in its steerage. What would the new land prove? The land of promise for which they had hoped and prayed all through those glorious October days upon the broad Atlantic? Would it realise their dreams of a promised land? Bring to them the peace, prosperity, equality - the right to live and fill a place in the land of their adoption? A right denied to many of them in their native land which they had left behind them in the wake of the good ship which had brought them safely across the vast waste of waters.
