Excerpt from The Life, Progresses, and Rebellion of James, Duke of Monmouth, C., To His Capture and Execution, Vol. 2 of 2: With a Full Account of the Bloody Assize, and Copious Biographical Notices The King s regular troops were near at hand, and an alarm was created by a party of Lord Oxford s horse. 1 Rainy weather now set in, which was much wanted for the land. There had been excessive drought for two years. The winters having likewise proved severe, there was such a dearth for want of rain, as Evelyn, in his Diary, records, had never happened in his memory. The men had to march in an exceedingly wet day and for some time the weather was inclement. Such is not unfrequently the case in our climate in June and July after a fine April and May, when there is all the appearance, excepting in temperature, of the wintry season. The commissaries served out provisions on the march. In this wet weather the army arrived at Glastonbury, where the ruins of the famed abbey exist, second only to those...
