Not illustrated. 1884 Excerpt: . . . verified by still extant archives of the fourteenth century. Of this an instance is furnished by notices in the Annals<sup>3</sup> in connexion with the Verdon riot in Uriel, or Louth, Verdon. in 1312. The soldiery of the Viceroy were, on that occa-Loud, sion, put to flight by the Verdons and their adherents, several persons were killed, and a fine of five hundred pounds was subsequently decreed against the county of Louth in connexion with the affair. No satisfactory account of these transactions appears in any historical work, but light is thrown upon them by records, 4 now published for the first time, which demonstrate the accuracy of the notices of them in the Annals. Many occurrences in Ireland during the presence there of the Bruces are entered in these Annals with precision, Bruce, and the days of the week on which they took place are in some instances named. The annalist supplies fuller details in connexion with the Bruces while in Ireland than have been left by any other writer, except Johu John Barbour, Archdeacon of Aberdeen.
