Beyond the traditional export business, industrial globalization keeps penetrating the worlds countries and markets under many different forms of international businesses and strategic alliances. This term paper describes, justifies and compares two forms of cross-border business expansion strategies into the Brazilian Market that a Multi-National-Corporation (MNC) may resort to: Foreign Direct Investment (FDI) and International Joint Venture (IJV). Their implementation strongly depends of the market type that a host country offers. A common denominator of both international market entry modes is the obviously advantageous presence of interests of the involved MNCs when trying to expand their businesses into host countries. This direct presence in a host country means additional speed to market and provides the MNCs far more possibilities of establishing, conduct This item ships from multiple locations.
