Excerpt: . . . for the election of commissioners of pilots, the word election was not used in any such sense as it is in the Constitution; or as the result of a choice by the ordinary mode of voting by the people. It is in legal effect an appointment, and comes within the meaning of that word, as used in the Constitution. The provisions of that act giving the appointment of such commissioners to the chamber of commerce, and the presidents of marine insurance companies, are not in conflict with the Constitution. In act of congress upon s subject within its jurisdiction, but upon which there has been State legislation, does not have the same effect upon the latter as would its repeal. Such act merely indicates the intention of congress, from that time to assume the exercise of the powers conferred by the federal Constitution. The State law becomes from that time inoperative but is not repealed; the repeal of the act of congress would leave the State law in full force. It cannot be presumed that any rights or interest secured, or obligations incurred under it (the State law), were intended to be interfered with, and hence a penalty incurred under the State law before, the act of congress is passed, may be recovered afterward. The statute (ch. 243, 29 of 1857), giving to the commissioners of pilots a penalty of 100 against any person employing a person to act as pilot not holding...
