Hyde Park, ran to the assistance of their President, but they were only able to share his fate. They were slashed by the swords, and punched by the tin bayonets; chance might have had it, that a battery of three wooden cannons loaded with stones, would have opened their fire on them--but happily at that moment, the artillerymen were absent from their post on a foray after gingerbread. Sir Richard and his co-philanthropists, were only able to withdraw by the aid of a policeman, whose appearance alone sufficed to put to flight both armies. The members of the Peace Congress betook themselves limping to their several hotels, lamenting more than ever over the terrible consequences of war. Eight days of sleep and bolstering, were necessary to insure the complete convalescence of all these victims of philanthropy. At the end of this time the members of the Peace Congress thought it useless to follow up the course of their session. A city where school-boys are so ferocious as they are in London is destined to perpetual war. We do not pity Sir Richard for his wounds--we congratulate him upon them--formerly he was only an apostle--now he is a martyr. We have had the happiness of contemplating the features of Sir Richard Cobden since his trip to Paris, at the end of the month of August. We have seen him at the moment, when as usual imbued with an interest in promoting universal peace, he supplicated the learned...
