(She was also the eldest daughter of Bible scholar and British Museum director Sir Frederic Kenyon.) She states in the Introduction of this 1978 book, that it is "intended for a general readership of those interested in the Bible and its setting, and NOT for specialists, be they textual critics, historians or archaeologists. The title consciously echoes that of my father's book, The Bible and archaeology, published in 1940. He had been induced to write it to place the Bible in its setting against the background of the vast increase in knowledge of the history of Western Asia. there is bound to be a difference of approach in that I am an archaeologist, an excavator, whereas my father was a...
