Excerpt from The Lowell Offering A few turns more brought him in sight of an opening large enough for quite a farm, in the centre of which stood a barn, and a small log house; that is, a house formed from whole timber, the logs laid lengthwise, one upon top of another, and grooved at the ends to fix the angles firmly. The barn was much more civilized. It was of pretty good sized dimensions, and framed from sawed and hewed timber, covered with boards. At the east end of the house, there was a large wood-pile, rivalling in size the house itself; and at the west end, there was an open shed, where, in spite of the frozen atmosphere, there were two men busily engaged in shaving pine staves, while a third one was setting up the staves into small tubs, which would hold three or four gallons. Do you expect any use for your buckets this spring? Abruptly inquired the traveller, reining in his horse towards the shed.
