I am standing on the ragged edge of despair as to what to say--and so far as making a speech is concerned, I almost wish I was dead.--() I might say, I am no orator as Brutus was; but what is the use of getting off an old saw like that, when everybody can see the fact for themselves. I have been physically unable to make a speech for nearly fifteen years, and it passeth all my understanding that, after listening to the best dinner speeches in response to toasts that I ever heard--such wisdom and eloquence and humor from our greatest soldiers--those prominent in the councils of the government and famous in the halls of Congress, and those inhabiting the high places of our own State, I say that after this, you should call upon my insignificant self, to take the taste of this sweetness out of your mouths, and to refine his mode of torture, General Garfield calls for solemn words from me. Why, Mr. Chairman, I never said anything solemn in my life--but my prayers--and so far as I have realized on them, I m afraid eveji they were looked upon as obscure jokes. My friend, General Garfield, does not even give me a solemn subject. He wants bricks without straw, figs of thistles, blood out of a turnip, and other impossible things. But, Mr. Chairman, there is an old proverb, Put a beggar on...
