Year: 5 Genre: Multi-cultural Stories

Summary

Laila's Lion
Laila's grandfather has a new job – Crossing Patrol at Laila's school. Her classmates make jokes (what's yellow and black and carries a warning!), and Laila is ashamed. Things could get worse when Grandfather comes to talk to the class, but they are enthralled with his story about the time he and his brother Ragnair were trapped by a lion. Ragnair was killed in the end, not by the lion but by the most dangerous thing to children – a car.

The Hunt
Sumi is always getting into trouble, so when the school art display is ruined just before the festival, everyone blames him. Sumi sits up all night watching for the red cougar. It's a monkey, but he will have to catch it to prove his innocence. The chase leads Sumi into the jungle, where he meets a hungry tiger. At the last moment he distracts the tiger by shining his torch in her eyes. By dawn, he is back in the village, with the guilty monkey to show everyone.

Mr Habibi's Garden
In a war zone, separated from his parents, Sumi is desperately looking for his brother. As the fighting grows worse, he scurries across an oasis of calm – Mr Habibi is still potting geraniums in his nursery garden. Soon the fighting is right on top of them. Sumi realizes that his brother is probably dead, and that he should try to find his parents. Wherever happens, Mr Habibi says, nature always wins. The geraniums will bloom again next year.

The Eye of the Eagle
High in the Himalayas, Lal and his dog Momo are helping Grandfather by watching the newborn lambs in the pastures. A Golden Eagle has already taken one lamb, wounding Momo, and is waiting for another opportunity. When it swoops, Lal has only Grandfather's stick to protect himself and the flock. He does his best, but the eagle's mate joins the attack. Only the combined efforts of Momo and the rest of the family keep the eagles at bay.
