Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Department of State Bulletin, Vol. 87: July-September, 1987 Now, if such a conference were ever to take place, only states would be represented and involved. They should have diplomatic relations with all of the parties that come to the table. And it should be clear that the right of any party to remove itself from the conference or the negotiations is there if such rules or understandings are not observed. Now there recently has been progress toward such a negotiating format, which would offer serious prospects of reaching an agreement between the parties on peace. So as far as we are concerned, we have to, as I said, look this over carefully, skeptically, but look it over. It may be that there is a genuine opportunity to bring about direct talks. If so, we have all been striving for that. I might say, all across the spectrum of Israeli politics, there is a desire to have direct talks. Everybody is in favor of that. Once direct talks have been achieved, an important psychological obstacle would have been overcome, irrespective of the results. We have to insist that there is no predetermined result or plan, so each party can advocate its preferred approach, including the approach that is represented in the Camp David accords. As far as the Soviets are concerned, it is impossible to know whether they want to be spoilers or whether they want to be constructive. I must say they couldn't do a lot worse than they're doing now - encouraging the plotters and the radicals to reunite. So we'll have to see about that.
