Then he gave more and more, until at last the patient was made insensible and the teeth were extracted. But the overdose probably caused the paralysis which supervened next day. The patient sued the dentist for malpractice in giving him so much. But the court said a practitioner is not responsible for remote or unknown causes of injury, or for peculiarities in a patients history or condition which are not told to the doctor. If chloroform is proper and safe to be given ordinarily in like cases, the doctors duty is discharged. The wall paper case has a bearing upon a doctors duties in time of epidemic. The small pox was prevalent, and in one house where several patients lay sick the attending physician observed that the wall paper in the sick rooms had become infected,...
