Kennedy and her best friend Cherae were like two peas in a pod, Kennedy's daddy would say because they were tighter than a large man in a medium suit jacket. Although they were totally different in size, personality and background, they had been friends and loved each other since the second grade. Tables turned for their friendship when that evil word jealousy came between them over a sexy club owner named Julian Roberson. One night led this duo down an ugly road that Kennedy never wanted to travel on and a road Cherae never imagined she'd lose on. Cherae opened up a can of pain on Kennedy and after over twenty-five years of friendship, one man caused it to fall apart. Not knowing what to do or who to trust, Kennedy sought support from her true friend Teresa, who had tried to warn her about her life-long pal Cherae many times before. When the smoke clears and the truth finally comes to light, they learn a lesson in friendship, love and loyalty.
