And feeling fine you blieve this tale, This story old, senile and stale--And take yourself away Until another day Shows error of your way. They never come back, these British daisies, For valueless agreements; They have the Hun beaten all to blazes; They never keep engagements. These modest maids, so papers state. Might grace the throne of potentate. These flawless kids, old Englands pride. Might better seek a place to hide, And help old Englands pride retain, Because a gent cant long remain--Before deciding that. As Englands diplomat, She wins no derby hat. J. Bryan Dickenson, Y. 1. The Battle of Eastleigh THE EARLY engagements of the battle were not fought on English soil, but on...
