He received his degree in Podiatry from the Ohio College of Podiatric Medicine (now known as Kent State University School of Podiatric Medicine) and has practiced Podiatry in North Carolina for sixty years. During those years, he had multiple opportunities for medical mission service in Nigeria, Tortola, and Honduras. Since December, 2014, he has retired from medical practice completely. Perhaps his service as a Medic in the Army planted the seed for his passion in Podiatry. The author was never a part of combat in World War II, and unlike those who were in combat, he never felt reluctant to talk about his experiences. Hearing his stories, many have requested that he write about them.
